Class Poem—1909

Clara Plumpton Chase.

Art is long,—so spake the poet,
And life is but a single span
Of the great, grand scheme of being
That's in this world since time began.

What is life? Wherein doth lie
The ever-present longing, reaching
Upward to the highest virtues,
Mind and soul rich stores to bring?

We've studied art as a factor
In the business world of to-day:
Does it pay to strive for richness,
Hurrying through life's busy way?

Consider Athens in its splendor,
Egypt's monumental grandeur,
Saracen and Moorish glory,
Rome, whose fame shall aye endure.

Adequate is their inheritance,
For all ages look to them;
They built firm for lasting memory
When they roused ideals in men.

Lot, in the days of olden time,
When given his choice of Canaan's land,
Claimed the fertile vale of Jordan—
Storehouse of wealth for all his band.

Abram, left with second choice,
Must to the green hills make his way;
Time enough there to think of Nature—
Live in its beauty day by day.

Two paths to us are open also,
One material with powers all for gain;
The other with a little rift of Heaven
Showing through, to lighten our domain.

May this second choice be ever ours,
E'en tho' it lies by the way of toil;
For there come incentives to higher things,
With broader views and a growing ideal.

Prove the beauty in the world then,
Take time to live and grasp the aim of life;
Study, think, feel, and worship;
Work will thus with joy be rife.
